

Money Talks, and So Should You
Together, We Can
Close the Pay Gap
and Build Equitable Workplaces for All

The Equal Pay Act was established nearly 60 years ago, in 1963, to abolish gender wage disparities.

Yet today, the 18¢ pay gap creates a chasm in the American dream for women<sup>1</sup>

Women in the U.S. are paid just 82¢ for every dollar paid to men. And that gap is even greater for women of color. That 18¢ gap might not sound like a lot, but it is a pervasive issue that affects the health of individuals, families, and our workforce today — and if we don't act, for future generations. In fact, the average gender pay discrepancy amounts to $10,157 in lost income for women annually.

The Wage Gap is Real

The wage gap is real — but what exactly does it mean?

The uncontrolled gender pay gap refers to average pay for men and women who are not performing similar jobs. For example, it examines systemic workforce disparities, such as women trending toward lower-paying roles and industries than men (e.g., men are far more likely than women to be neurologists, and women more likely than men to be pediatricians), or the financial setback that motherhood can have on careers.

On the other hand, the controlled pay gap refers specifically to the pay of men and women performing similar jobs — so, if you have a male and a female neurologist, are they paid equally?

While the uncontrolled pay gap is multifaceted and not solely a compensation issue, the controlled gap is a compensation issue that can and should be addressed by HR leaders.

According to the National Center for Education Statistics, more women than men have earned bachelor's degrees since 1982, more master's degrees since 1987, and more doctorate degrees since 2006. There's no question about it: The workforce is full of highly trained, qualified women.

"Our culture often equates money with value and power. If people are doing the same work but are not making the same pay, it is a strong statement, even if implicit, that some people are more or less valuable."

Heather Bussing, HR Examiner

Facing the Facts: Understanding the Gender Pay Gap

According to MarketWatch, 45% of workers say salary is the top reason for switching jobs, ahead of career advancement opportunities, benefits, and location. Underpaying female employees sends a powerful message about their ability to grow and prosper in an organization. And they're listening.

Pay equity means paying employees fairly based on their work and contributions

Pay equity means paying people for what they do, not who they are. Perhaps you've heard the phrase "equal pay for equal work." It's a powerful mandate; it means eliminating sex, race, and all types of unlawful bias from the wage-setting system, because no one should be paid any more or less based on their identity. Employee pay differences should be based on lawful and valid factors, including job requirements, experience, and performance.

Women earn 82¢ for every $1.00 that men earn — but it doesn't hurt only women

When a woman is paid less for doing the same work as a man, it can diminish morale and drive. "Gender pay inequity leaves nearly 50% of our workforce coming to and leaving from work every day feeling taken advantage of and undervalued," says Sarah Morgan, CEO of BuzzARooney LLC. "The long-term impact of this on morale within our workforce as well as the individual health and wellness of the individual cannot be ignored." Indeed, the pay gap hurts women, families, organizations, and entire economies.

The lifelong ripple effect of the 18¢ shortfall includes other types of compensation

Consider this: Women's bonuses are statistically smaller on average than men's, and since companies often match a percentage of pay to retirement accounts, these investment vehicles are yet another area where women get shortchanged. In the same vein, Social Security benefits are based on lifetime earnings, so as women earn less over the course of their lives, they pay less into Social Security. In retirement, that means they will receive smaller payouts compared to those of male peers. Talk about a wide-reaching ripple.

Fair pay is good for business because it's the law

Pay disparities don't bring down only women; they bring down organizations, too. Think lost productivity, innovation, and the cost of attrition. And when morale is low, absenteeism soars. But there's an even higher cost to businesses when you consider the crystal-clear letter of the law — gender-based pay discrimination is, in fact, illegal.

"Pay equity is not optional; it's a legal compliance issue," says employment attorney Heather Bussing. "Not paying people equally for the same work is a form of illegal discrimination. Pretending you don't have a problem is not a defense."

UKG is on a Mission to Deliver Equal Change

UKG is proudly taking a stand to move the needle on this pervasive issue.<sup>2</sup> Our purpose is people — and this means a world where people are valued fairly, regardless of their gender identity, race, ability, or other demographic category. As a top employer for women and a leading payroll provider to employers with millions of employees across organizations of all sizes and industries, we have the unique ability to speak out and act while innovating our work systems to help highlight the need for pay equity.

We're taking these actions:

- Close the Gap Commitment: To help close the wage gap, UKG is contributing 18¢ to the fight for pay equity for every single one of the 15 million employees paid each year via a UKG™ payroll solution. That's a $3 million investment in critical programs and initiatives that support the fight for pay equity.
- Pay Equity in America Research Study: UKG is launching its first pay equity in America research study in collaboration with Harvard Business Review to further highlight the existing pay gaps between men and women in the workforce as well as progress employers are making nationwide to create more equitable conditions among all genders. Results of this study will be released in 2022.
- Philanthropic Support: UKG is announcing partnerships with four nonprofits — Grantmakers for Girls of Color, LeanIn.org, Reboot Representation, and 9to5 — that are focused on bringing greater access to education, career opportunities, and equal pay to women, women of color, and other traditionally underrepresented groups. These organizations help women, girls, and people of color — including Black, Latina, and Native American women as well as those who identify as transgender — access opportunity through education, enter the workforce, grow their careers, and advocate for critical policy changes to create equitable workforces.<sup>3</sup>
- Educational Resources and Awareness: UKG is partnering with experts to develop educational resources for best practices in HR, compensation planning, recruiting, and hiring that are known to establish pay equity and to make these resources publicly available for all. UKG also launched a pay equity awareness campaign in December 2021 through broadcast and digital media platforms.
